If your IGCSE strategy for the Art and Design subject was “quantity” over “quality” on the As and A level it will be not like that, like at all!! It is important for you to start early as possible. Your teacher is probably telling you to the same thing and it is important to follow the word.

▼ What I regret doing

- Putting my work back to its last minute: Let's be honest we all did that on our IGCSE and we all got a somewhat decent grade for what we have done on those last days. However, the minimum standard for the quality of your works go ridiculously high in As level. Especially for the people who have 4-6 subjects, it is gonna be hard to manage all the work if you keep putting your coursework on the back of your to-do list, as I know that art can take away the a lot of fraction of your time. So I genuinely recommend to you to reconsider your choice to study the subject like “Can I dedicate the amount of time required to it?”, “Do I really have to choose it?”. You may have decided to choose the subject because you love art, and I have done the same, but please choose wisely. (please don't end up hating art like me TvT)
- Doing my final work in the span of a week: Especially for your first component, it is crucial to put a large amount of effort into it as it is the final product of your months of effort. I think they pay more importance to this final work than of your component 2, so I think it can guarantee you at least C.
- Only focusing on one aspect of your study: For example, I think I did the wrong thing by painting so many portraits but doing far less study of the other things. So make sure you plan each page your coursework in a great detail and make a to-do list if you want to of all the necessary works you have to finish

▼ What I regret not doing

- Having a good idea of my final work from the beginning: You may think you will get this amazing idea for your final work on your way but that is just as false as you think your crush will like you back. So have a clear idea from the beginning and develop on it on the way of your study. Also, you will not get to do redundant work that way.
- Doing an artist study: Doing an artist study can help you on the prior tip.
